Something about the last two months has brought out the creative juices in me. There are more paintings and sculpting ideas per day now than at any time in my artistic life. I think I'm starting to get in touch with a sense of what I want to do with my work, as well as how to make my own choices, rather than just going through the motions of illustrating someone else's ideas. 6 May 2007 Easter Sunday, 2007 After the usual three eggs and two bunnies, and a toast to life in general, I chose to portray our family pet cat, Serena, a white cat with brown markings in a realistically imagined scenario. She's been getting older, but she's as lively as ever. 17 April 2007 I don't know why, but the last week or so has brought out in me a sudden burst of creativity. This isn't at all unusual for me, but I haven't felt this good in months and months. In fact, I hadn't had a really good time since I finished illustrating my children's book, "The Happiest Mama." I started to work on some new paintings but quickly found myself moving more freely, trying different things. I know I'm not as inspired as I was with other ideas, but that seems to be the way I'm starting to feel. This isn't as good as the last wave of activity, but it's at least a start. 7 April 2007 Because I've decided to challenge myself to paint a new subject every week, I thought I would start with a painting that I haven't done before, and I haven't painted for a long time. I chose the spring theme of blossoms, trees and flowers because I wanted to draw inspiration from nature, but also allow myself the chance to play in my creative impulses. It's been a bit of a struggle to paint all this, but also a lot of fun. I hope this keeps up. 3 April 2007 I've been trying to paint something like this for the last couple of months, but it's been one of those things where I thought I needed to have an idea in mind before I could try to make a picture. The last one was done with very little forethought, but it was the only picture I could find. This time, I haven't got anything in mind, but I wanted to work with a bigger brush and bring it to life a bit more. 21 March 2007

What's New in the Paint Text Photoshop Download?

Scott Walker's terrible year for ideas Scott Walker's terrible year for ideas Wisconsin Gov. Scott Walker (R), being questioned by a reporter from the Milwaukee Sentinel, has some bad ideas to share. Secretary of state Scott G. Walker has said he wants to make Wisconsin a "model" for the nation on elections, but instead Wisconsin has become a model for an election year in which national politicians are talking about Wisconsin. On Aug. 14, Wisconsin's Republican lieutenant governor, Rebecca Kleefisch, became the first person to drop out of a Republican primary for governor in Wisconsin's history. She is now running as a Republican in the 1st Congressional District, the seat vacated by Rep. Jim Sensenbrenner, who is retiring this year. Three House Republicans — all from Wisconsin — are facing competitive primaries: Reps. Sean Duffy (WI-7) in Wisconsin's 7th Congressional District, Mark Neumann (WI-01) in the 1st District and Rep. Tammy Baldwin (WI-2) in the 2nd District. Republicans are worried because Democrats, who are in the process of becoming the majority party in the U.S. House, have a tough time winning in Republican districts. As the Michigan congressman who stepped down from Congress to run for governor, John Conyers, knows, there are many House Democrats up for election in 2016. Conyers is up for re-election in a heavily Democratic district. The January 2015 law stripping Wisconsin of collective bargaining rights for public workers, which is being challenged in a lawsuit, was the major issue of the Wisconsin spring election. The defeat of a recall election of Wisconsin Gov. Scott Walker, who had been anointed by national Republicans as a future presidential candidate, was the issue of the July recall election. The defeat of GOP members of Congress in the primaries of Duffy and Neumann was the issue of the August primary. A Democratic victory in the August election would have grave consequences for Republicans in the next general election. Thus, the rise and fall of Scott Walker was the great issue of a year in which nearly every national political party and nearly every national politician wanted to talk about Wisconsin. For Walker, the road to the presidency has been a miserable one. Walker was supposed to be the new face of Republican party reform. He promised a return to the philosophy of Dwight Eisenhower, the popular former president of the United States, and he promised
