Sync Tabs Now Sidebery is also a plugin (can be installed as a single-click) that will allow you to synchronize all the tabs you create in your Sidebar with your computer. The plugin starts by recording the tabs you have currently open in your Sidebar, after which it will ask you to press the green Sync button. How does it work? When you click on the Sync button (which will be located in the Sidebar), you will be asked to press the green button, which will start the sync process. This process will take into account your Tab Switcher button and the sidebar clock (in order to sync the right time in your computer and Sidebery) and will show you a new tab labeled "Synchronization". If you have tabs that are currently not in your Sidebar, you can drag them from the tab bar and drop them on the Synchronization tab to move them to your Sidebar. If you have tabs that are currently in your Sidebar, you can also drag them and drop them on the Synchronization tab, which will remove them from the Sidebar and add them to your Tab Switcher. How to use: - Click on the Synchronization tab in the sidebar to synchronize your tabs. - Click on the green Sync button in your Sidebar

"Place your tabs neatly and conveniently. Sidebery lets you customize the tabs sidebar, the container tabs, sort tabs, and more, all with a click of your mouse." "An issue with tabs in new Firefox versions. Unless you switch off of them, they occupy the same space in your sidebar as you do in the rest of Firefox. This could interfere with the way you work. Sidebery lets you decide how you'd like your sidebar to be arranged." Marketplace link (Windows) If you're interested, the extension is available in the Mozilla Add-ons marketplace here. As with all add-ons, you'll have to be running the latest version of Firefox (and the same version of it) to have it work. That's not the case for Windows though: the extension should work on any Firefox version, but it'll only be available for the latest.
