Office 2010 Activator is an efficient tool who's .Q: how to get a reference to a list item on listview? i have a listview which is bound to a list of a custom object (i have no problems with that and it works fine), and i want to know how to get a reference to a list item from a button click event on a listitemtemplate. i can access the listitemtemplate from the clicked event when i bind the listitems as is below, how can i get access to them from the button click event? A: It depends on your needs, but here is one of possible ways (but I would recommend you to use events instead of ASP controls click event for the sake of maintainability and flexibility). Update: See my second answer below for the more appropriate solution. You may use the foreach function to loop through the ListView items. If you do not have set the defaultviewtemplate (default view is a list view in which you can simply loop through the items and get each data) you can use this piece of code : `foreach (ListViewItem item in LView.Items) { //code for each item }` If you do have set the defaultviewtemplate, in this case, then you can use this code : (Assuming that you are setting the click event for your button) `foreach (ListViewItem item in LView.DefaultView) { //code for each item }` About the event, the ASP documentation explains more here. UPDATE : To get the clicked ListViewItem from the button click event (assuming you want the button click to retrieve the clicked item), you can do it this way: `protected void lb_Click(object sender, EventArgs e) { //Define where to receive the listview item ListViewItem item = (ListViewItem)lb.Items[lb.SelectedIndex]; //I usually add another argument to`
