Russia's Central Bank hiked interest rates for the second time in as many months, as the ruble plunged to its lowest level in a decade on Wednesday. The bank's head, Elvira Nabiullina, has said that a wider exchange rate band, a central bank bank statement said, and a "more flexible monetary policy" are "required to provide a more sustainable equilibrium." The central bank's last rate hike in September also came after Russia's currency had dropped to a 16-month low. As of Wednesday, the ruble was trading at 65.1 per dollar, down from 70.0 per dollar on Tuesday. It had also dropped to 64.25 on Tuesday and 66.1 on Monday. What the #ruble is doing Below are the key indicators that are used in determining the ruble's movements.
