The importance of .Nanoscale patterning of poly(4-vinylpyridine) brushes in aqueous solutions by self-assembly. Well-controlled poly(4-vinylpyridine) (P4VP) brushes in aqueous solutions were prepared by the surface-initiated atom transfer radical polymerization (SI-ATRP) method in combination with a subsequent surface-initiated ring-opening metathesis polymerization (SI-ROMP) of norbornene (NB) on the P4VP-modified SiO<sub>2</sub> surface. The P4VP brushes were characterized using contact angle measurement, ellipsometry, and atomic force microscopy (AFM). The AFM results indicate that the P4VP brushes were extremely long (roughly several micrometers) and highly uniform. This contrast AFM and dynamic force spectroscopy measurements revealed that the P4VP brushes with a be achieved. Normalization of the QT interval to less than 400 ms and significant reduction of the arrhythmia frequency by hydroxyurea could be achieved. This rare case illustrates the role of QT interval duration as a prognostic factor for cardio-toxicity in patients receiving antineoplastic treatment.

Q: How can I get pydot to display node labels? I have a directed graph whose nodes are annotated with the appropriate order from a list of several hundred possibilities. I want to print this out with pydot, but I can't seem to find the right way to do it.

The information can be a hard copy, a digital file, or part of a stored item. The best way to avoid identity theft is to never use someone else's name or identity. Identity theft is much more common than you might think. A study showed that 51% of teens ages 12-17 have experienced some form of identity theft. Shawn Blake Who's stalking you? If it happens to you, chances are it happened to someone else. Over the last few years, the number of people in the U.S. who have had their credit or debit cards or other personal information compromised has nearly quadrupled. In one study, almost half of the 1,500 respondents named someone they knew who had their information stolen from an identity theft. Of the individuals who'd been a victim of identity theft, 65% said someone had hacked into their computer, with the most common method being phishing, or email trickery with a fake promise of some sort. Most identity theft victims are not actually under a threat of major financial loss. While that's a major part of identity theft, others are actually using other people's information to make purchases or apply for jobs. That's a serious threat to the rest of us. Unlike putting a computer virus on someone's hard drive, where the individual can clean the virus, recovering stolen credit card numbers is no simple process. And while there are many methods of dealing with identity theft, the best way to avoid identity theft is to never use someone else's name or identity. Cover your bases Think like a thief. When a thief steals your identity, he usually doesn't know a whole lot about you. While your Social Security number and address are of special interest to identity thieves, they are just the first step. Once they have your information, they will try to open new credit cards and use the new identity to take more money out of your bank account. So while it's important for you to protect your information, you also want to be sure that someone who does steal your information cannot
